Types of COMMUNITIES

START HERE

There are three main types of communities: urban, suburban, and rural. Click on each type below to learn more about each one!

URBAN SUBURBAN RURAL

SUBURBAN COMMUNITIES

Getting Around in the Suburbs

Cars
The suburbs are quieter than communities in the city. People often live in houses with yards in neighborhoods. Buildings are usually shorter and more spread out.

Bikes
In the suburbs, many people own their own cars to travel around their community. Some people use bikes to get around. Sometimes, people in the suburbs commute, or travel, into the city for work.

DAILY LIFE

9 out of every 10 Icelanders live in or near cities on the coast. The most populated city in Iceland is the capital city of Reykjavik. Icelanders travel around cities by car, bikes, or buses.

80% of Iceland is not lived on because of its rough land and lack of access to needed resources. However, there are some farms that raise sheep, chickens, and cows. They can also grow potatoes, hay, and other crops.

SCHOOL & WORK

Icelandic children start school at the age of 6. They are required to attend school until they are 16. Students study the Icelandic language, math, science, social studies, art, and other subjects. They also learn to speak English and Danish in elementary school.

Since many Icelanders live near the coast, many people are fishers. Others living in more rural areas are farmers. People living in the city have a variety of jobs such as working in factories, stores, hospitals or in offices.
